HEBREW TO GREEK TRANSLATION OF THE EXPRESSIONS "FACE OF THE EARTH" AND "FACE OF THE WATERS"

_

Note: some of the verses in this document have a red mark next to them. It is used when, as per the context, the expression refers to a specific part of land or water and not the earth or the waters as a whole. As a result, the verse cannot be used to support the claim.

It seems that the scribes substituted a parallelism of the first part for the specific translation of the second one, even though the latter is about the same event. The circle is on the face of the deep – therefore beyond the earth – and the heavens are set in the ends of the world – Psalm 19:4. The point of this circle then is to serve as a base for the heavens. Perhaps this is the line of thinking that had them make this parallelism.

Thus, "throne" could refer to the firmament and "winds" to the air or the open heavens where bird fly, clouds, sun moon, stars are located. The verse then would read "when he prepared the heavens, I was present with him; when he separated the firmament upon the air", which would be a direct evocation to Genesis 1:6, where God divides the waters and makes the firmament in the midst of them, creating an open expanse for birds to fly, clouds to move and luminaries to shine.

The sense here would be that God separates the firmament from the waters below and the air in between, result of its expanding from the midst of the waters upwards.

¹ The Greek reads epi G1909 "On, upon", but the word it is attached to is "wind". Literally verse 27 is "and when he separated his throne upon the winds". The first part of the verse was rendered "when he prepared the heavens, I was present with him", while the Hebrew reads "when he made firm the heavens".
